LORD SALISBURY FORMALLY YIELDS THE REINS OF POWER.

The memorable scene in the House of Commons when the vote of no confidence was taken—speculations as to the personal and political future of the Conservative leader—these are the subjects of the course of the Conservative government in the House of Commons.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The press of Ireland are again. By a majority of forty the House of Commons has sent Mr. Balfour and his colleagues into the front line of opposition. It was a memorable scene. Acting in concert, the Liberals as a body took very little part in the debate; they were quite content with the position of their views as given by the Grand Old Man on Tuesday. The Unionists kept the ball rolling to the last, but the monotony of their charges was broken up by the speaker's question. The speaker responded with the determined yell of one who had waited long for "no." Then the House divided, and twenty minutes later the speaker announced the figures. There was a great shout, and the members of the House of Commons cheered Balfour when he rose, but as the Grand Old Man walked out the scene was of the wildest description. Cheers upon cheers arose, and the waving of handkerchiefs set the atmosphere in a flutter until it was thought that the demonstration would continue until daylight. Then the Irish members, who were with the Conservatives, stood up and sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the members of the House of Commons joined in the chorus.

There were some humorous incidents at the winding up of the debate. The whips had fixed the division for 11 o'clock, but at that hour three or four Tories had not arrived. Thereupon Henry Chaplin, an agricultural laborer, who had been waiting outside for some time, was called in to speak. He spoke of the division, and of the fact that he had not arrived. He then spoke of the fact that he had not arrived, and of the fact that he had not arrived.

The division was the most remarkable on record in the House of Commons. Six hundred and sixty members voted. Of the ministers there were two Tories and one Liberal. The House was divided into two equal parts. The House was divided into two equal parts. The House was divided into two equal parts.

Now the Grand Old Man has only to form his Government and take over the power. Salisbury resigned office this morning, and the Queen this afternoon has conveyed her mandate to Mr. Gladstone, who will take office on Monday and "kiss hands" with Lord Rosebery, who will then submit the names of the colleagues he proposes to intrust with the affairs of State. It is believed that Lord Rosebery would be Secretary for Foreign Affairs, but some question has been raised as to his fitness for the post. Mr. Gladstone has been elected to the post of Secretary for Foreign Affairs, but some question has been raised as to his fitness for the post.

When Mr. Gladstone last took office the exact course of continuation of the Conservative government was a matter of speculation. It was a matter of speculation. It was a matter of speculation. It was a matter of speculation.

At the last change of ministry in 1886 the Queen was at Osborne. Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet met on July 20. When the results of all the elections except the Irish were known, they decided to resign forthwith, and the decision was communicated to Osborne by the Queen's messenger. The Queen promptly accepted the resignation without troubling Mr. Gladstone to present himself for a personal interview, the resignation for Lord Salisbury.

bury who was then on the Continent at Royal. He was not till July 30, a day or so before the seals of office were handed over to the new Ministry, that Mr. Gladstone went to Osborne for a farewell audience.

There has been a great deal of talk as to the probability that another general election is near, and there is no doubt that the Conservative party is active in preparing for such an event next year. The old Parliamentary hands on the Conservative benches are, however, very skeptical upon the point. Apart from the fact that the unexpected always happens in the House of Commons, there are special circumstances in the present case which justify the belief that neither party will be particularly anxious for a fresh appeal to the constituencies. A number of both the Conservative and Unionist supporters kept their seats by working at a pressure almost without precedent in the records of electioneering effort, and these members freely admitted that they had done so in order to carry through a similar struggle, and make similar sacrifices at the end of another few months. More than one seat was kept for Conservative government solely by the personal influence of the sitting member, which would certainly be lost at another election. The sitting member would refuse to go through the labor and incur the expense of another contest. There are similar cases, of course, on the Liberal side, but the chances of another general election next year depend on the action not of the Liberals, but of the Unionist Opposition. Another general election, if it comes, will be a very different one from the last. It will be a very different one from the last. It will be a very different one from the last.

It is quite true that the leaders still talk of fighting the bill by every means consonant with parliamentary rules, and they will carry out this intention, but they will not do so. They will not do so. They will not do so. They will not do so.

Lord Francis George Godolphin Osborne had a quarter of an hour at the hands of Mr. Justice Chitty yesterday. This representative of the nobility brought an action against the House of Commons to restrain it from passing a bill which would take away from him the right to take 400 shares, evidently because he was not appointed a director. In dismissing the action Justice Chitty showed not only that the House of Commons was not liable, but that the plaintiff had been misled by the House of Commons.

The long-expected new opera by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. Sydney Grundy, the production of which was delayed by the composer's illness, will be placed in regular rehearsal at the Savoy Theatre Saturday night. It is a comedy in three acts, and is a very different one from the last. It is a comedy in three acts, and is a very different one from the last. ## WILL FIND JORDAN'S BODY.

CORONER SCHENCK INTENDS TO RISK AN IRON SHAF.

The Queens County Board of Supervisors Having Declined to Make an Appropriation for the Work, He Will Pay for It. Coroner Elbert Schenck has a plan under way for recovering the body of Peter Jordan, the well digger who was buried beneath seventy-five feet of sand by a cave-in in a well on Henry Cox's farm in Great Neck. He has procured a long iron shaft, and is now working on it.

The cave-in occurred on the morning of July 27, when Jordan was at work on a small platform thirty-five feet from the bottom of the well, bricking up the sides. A number of attempts have since been made to recover the body. The work was under the direction of William Eato, a brother-in-law of the buried man, who is considered an expert well digger.

On Monday morning of last week the iron shaft which they had been sinking was fifty-five feet deep. This was within twenty feet of the platform, where it is expected Jordan's body will be found.

Side of quicksand, which appears to be the cause of the accident. The shaft is now being sunk, and it is expected that the body will be found within a few days.

Coroner Schenck and Engineer G. A. Roulier of Flushing decided that the only thing they could do with the appliances at hand was to fill in the old shaft and sink a new one.

Speaking of the outbreak, James Brown, Secretary of the Tennessee Coal, Iron, and Railroad Company, said that the trouble has come from about 150 of the miners at Tracy City. It is the result of a secret oath-bound organization which was formed some weeks ago. That was where the definite action began. A reduction of hours necessary owing to lack of coal.

We contemplated shutting down our furnaces for a week, but thought it better to run even on half time than not at all. In 1890 the July output was 37,618 tons. In 1891 the July output was 38,288. In 1892 the July output was 28,615. You have seen the reason for the outbreak.

John Green Accused of Having Ten Wives, and the Mothers Are Not All In.

BUFFALO, Aug. 13.—By all odds the prisoner with the most interesting history confined here in the penitentiary is John Green, who, on the date, is accused of having no less than ten wives, all living. When on Wednesday it became known that he had been married twice in one week to Miss Helen Tripp of this city nobody had any idea that he had wives all over this country and in Canada. Little by little the details of his matrimonial experiences have come to light, the number of his wives increasing at the rate of two a day.

It is not quite two years since he began his bigamous career. A despatch from Syracuse today said that Green had a wife there, and that she is making preparations to come to Buffalo to prosecute him for polygamy.

Green is a native of New York, and is now in the penitentiary for a term of five years. He has been married ten times, and has ten wives living. He has been married ten times, and has ten wives living. He has been married ten times, and has ten wives living.

The marriage of W. Austin Goodman and Mrs. J. H. Beattie, both of Cincinnati, at the Oriental Hotel in this city last Wednesday afternoon has excited a good deal of interest in this city.

On Tuesday last Mrs. Beattie and her mother, Mrs. Moore, called on the Rev. Benjamin K. King, minister of the Mission, who is a Baptist minister, and who lives at 219 East Twenty-seventh street, and made arrangements for the wedding.

Mrs. Beattie told her mother that Mr. Goodman would reach New York on the steamship "The City of New York" on Wednesday afternoon, and that she would be waiting for him at the Oriental Hotel.

Mr. Goodman's card was brought up at ten minutes after 5 and the bridegroom followed. He was wearing a tuxedo, and was looking very well. He was wearing a tuxedo, and was looking very well. He was wearing a tuxedo, and was looking very well.
